BATTLES OF THE HUNDRED DAYS is a two-player, division-level, Napoleonic mini-game of the Battle of Waterloo. It was first published in 1979 by Operational Studies Group (OSG) in a ziploc format and was later republished in the small box format by Avalon Hill in 1983.

The game is short and bloody. In only four turns, the French player must inflict a 40 strength point loss on the Prussians or a 30 strength point loss on the British. Alternatively, if the French player can exit Napoleon and 20 Strength points off the north edge of the map, he can win. The Prussian-British player wins if the French player can not achieve any of these conditions or suffers 45 strength points in losses.
